As we announced last year, the New York Law School community has been proudly celebrating our rich legacy throughout this past year as part of our 125th Anniversary. Our celebrations have been extraordinary, giving us opportunities to showcase the rich and diverse history of our institution's students, faculty, and alumni. As we celebrate our past, there is much to celebrate in our present achievements, and much to look forward to in our future.

This edition of New York Law School Magazine features one of our proudest moments that took place this past fall when we opened The Joe Plumeri Center for Social Justice and Economic Opportunity, thanks to the historic generosity of Joe and Susan Plumeri. We take a look at the diverse features of The Plumeri Center and how it will advance our already nationally recognized practical training programs, and we hear from the man who made this possible, Joe Plumeri '15 (LL.D.).

We also look at a new book from an alumnus and faculty member, Associate Librarian and Professor of Legal Research Michael Roffer '83. The Law Book: From Hammurabi to the International Criminal Court, 250 Milestones in the History of Law, examines nearly 4,000 years of global legal history. Making it even more remarkable is the extent to which NYLS faculty and alumni figured into many of these events within the last 125 years.

One of the qualities unique to NYLS is how many of our alumni are entrepreneurs. The entrepreneurial spirit has been in our DNA from our founding. We highlight the achievements of many in our community, while looking to our future with new initiatives such as the Innovation Center for Law and Technology and our growing relationship with the University of Rochester's Simon Business School, now located within our campus.

We also briefly summarize and share images from our Annual Gala in December 2015, honoring Joe Plumeri '15 (LL.D.) and Norman Radow '81. Held in a stunning location, the honorees and guests had an opportunity to celebrate our 125th Anniversary and help us build for our future.

We honor two of our most acclaimed faculty members who have recently been appointed to named professorships: Stephen J. Ellmann and David Chang. Professor Ellmann has been appointed as the Martin Professor of Law, and Professor Chang was appointed as the inaugural Theodore Dwight 125th Anniversary Professor of Law.

Professor David Schoenbrod honors his former student, the late Nicholas Wasicsko '87, one-time Mayor of Yonkers and the subject of the acclaimed HBO miniseries Show Me a Hero. While Wasicsko's life was tragically cut short, he left a powerful impact on his community and changed the course of his city.

We continue to build upon our extraordinary accomplishments over the last 125 years, by taking bold steps for our future. We look forward to keeping you apprised of exciting new developments in our community.

CELEBRATING

A CELEBRATION OF MILESTONES

New York Law School has attained many milestones over its storied history. As the school celebrates its 125th Anniversary, it continues to mark milestones on its path forward. This past year alone, NYLS launched The Joe Plumeri Center for Social Justice and Economic Opportunity, forged a historic partnership with the Simon Business School of the University of Rochester, and introduced the new Innovation Center for Law and Technology.

The timing of the 125th Anniversary celebration seems auspicious, considering the many other significant anniversaries (legal and otherwise) being celebrated during the 2015–16 year. It also marks the 800-year anniversary of the Magna Carta; the 250-year anniversary of the publication of Blackstone's Commentaries; the 250-year anniversary of the 1765 Stamp Act; the 150-year anniversary of Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox Court House; the 150-year anniversary of the New York City Fire Department; the 125-year anniversary of Carnegie Hall; the 125-year anniversary of the Evarts Act, creating the Federal Circuit Courts; the 125-year anniversary of the invention of basketball; the 100-year anniversary of the appointment of Louis D. Brandeis to the United States Supreme Court and the 125-year anniversary of his famous Harvard Law Review article, "The Right to Privacy," co-authored with Samuel Warren; the 50-year anniversary of the Voting Rights Act of 1965; and the 25-year anniversary of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

One additional milestone recently celebrated at the Law School was the release of The Law Book: From Hammurabi to the International Criminal Court, 250 Milestones in the History of Law, authored by Associate Librarian and Professor of Legal Research Michael Roffer '83. Covering nearly four thousand years of global legal history, the book highlights some of the most significant legal issues, cases, trials, and events that have profoundly changed our world. Fittingly, a number of milestones addressed in The Law Book bear direct connections to New York Law School through some of its many distinguished alumni and faculty. Some of those are included here.

The Law Book Highlights

Columbia Professor Defects to Establish NYLS

NYLS's first Dean and Professor, George Chase, broke away with Theodore Dwight and other faculty from the Columbia College School of Law to found New York Law School in 1891. Among Chase's many accomplishments was his publication in 1876 of The American Students' Blackstone: Commentaries on the Laws of England in Four Books, an abridged version of Blackstone's Commentaries, used regularly as a text for teaching American law students. It was widely known as "Chase's Blackstone." The original Blackstone's Commentaries, of which former Librarian of Congress Daniel Boorstin wrote that, "in the history of American institutions, no other book—except the Bible—has played so great a role," is now celebrating its 250th anniversary and is one of the topics covered in The Law Book. For many years, the Mendik Library has owned a 1938 reprint of Chase's Blackstone. In early 2015, the Yale Law Library sponsored an exhibition titled, 250 Years of Blackstone's Commentaries. Among the objects comprising the exhibition was the first student edition of Blackstone, published in 1876, as well as a copy of the 1938 reprint. Yale's copy bears the 1948 annotations of a New York Law School student, Richard W. Reynolds. The accompanying image of an annotated page from the Yale copy appears in Yale's exhibition catalog.

Magna Carta of the Labor Movement

Robert F. Wagner,
Class of 1900

A number of the other milestones covered in The Law Book relate to significant statutes enacted over the years. One of the Law School's most prominent alums, Robert F. Wagner, Class of 1900, is perhaps best known for the statute that bears his name—the Wagner Act. Officially titled the National Labor Relations Act, this cornerstone piece of New Deal legislation enacted in 1935 granted employees the right to unionize and bargain collectively, paving the way for decades of worker protections and earning the sobriquet "Magna Carta of the labor movement."

The Hellhound of Wall Street

Ferdinand Pecora

Although less well known, Ferdinand Pecora, who attended New York Law School between 1903 and 1905 (receiving an honorary degree in 1958), was instrumental in the congressional hearings that led to enactment of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Serving as chief counsel to the Senate's Committee on Banking and Currency, Pecora came to be known as "the hellhound of Wall Street," exposing years of unsavory conduct and triggering the enactment of significant financial regulations. Wall Street bankers—dubbed "banksters" by the media—were shamed and ridiculed when Pecora revealed that National City (known today as Citibank) knowingly offered unsound securities to the public and failed to disclose information relevant to investors' decisions. His performance created the political climate necessary for the Roosevelt administration to enact federal legislation regulating the banks. Pecora's conduct of the committee's hearings and the results he achieved had a profound and lasting impact on the regulation of Wall Street and government protection of investors. His work resonates still in Washington's efforts over the ensuing decades and into the 21st century to oversee and police the conduct of the financial services industry. Pecora went on to become one of the first SEC Commissioners, as well as a New York State Supreme Court Justice.

The Beginnings of the Federal War on Drugs

Francis Burton Harrison,
Class of 1897

Prior to the economic depression, the country and the world were facing another scourge in the form of opium. In 1913, Representative (and later Governor General of the Philippines) Francis Burton Harrison, Class of 1897, introduced legislation to address what he referred to as "an almost shameless traffic in these drugs," and the "accompanying moral and economic degradation." In 1914, Congress enacted the Harrison Act, which obliged those who imported, manufactured, sold, prescribed, or dispensed opiates to register with a federal agency and comply with record-keeping requirements. Henceforth, opiates would be lawful for medical purposes only and would be subject to strict regulation (and taxation) from importation to dispensation. The Act's constitutionality was upheld in 1919, in a decision that deemed it unlawful for doctors to prescribe opiates for their addict patients. From that point forward, addicts no longer had any legal source of opiates; a thriving market for illicit drugs followed.

The Mecca of Prizefighting

James J. Walker, Class of 1906, on the cover of Time magazine May 20, 1929

New York Law School alumni have also been responsible at the state level for milestone legislation that continues to shape today's world. Late-19th-century New York City was a major boxing venue, even though the sport was legally banned. Along with San Francisco, it was "the mecca of prizefighting." The sport's watershed moment came in 1920, when James J. Walker, Class of 1906, and then New York State Senate minority leader (and future New York City mayor), shepherded what became the Walker Act through the Legislature. The Act implemented many rules that protected fighters but most importantly, it created a permanent regulatory body, the New York State Athletic Commission, to oversee the sport. That Commission continues to exist today. The Act immediately became the model for similar legislation across the country and helped make boxing a respectable sport.

Colby Proclaims Woman Suffrage

Bainbridge Colby,
Class of 1892

As New York was legalizing boxing, the rest of the country was finally embracing the right of women to vote. In June 1919, Congress approved the Nineteenth Amendment, granting women that right. A little more than a year later, the necessary number of states ratified the amendment. On August 27, 1920, The New York Times headlines announced, "Colby Proclaims Woman Suffrage." The "Colby" was Bainbridge Colby, a member of New York Law School's Class of 1892. Colby was the Secretary of State under President Wilson and in that capacity had just issued the proclamation announcing that the Nineteenth Amendment had become a part of the Constitution.

The Most Celebrated of all Torts Cases and the Palsgraf Players

On August 25, 1924, New York City's major newspapers reported an explosion that had taken place the preceding day at a Brooklyn train station. Coverage of the incident faded quickly, but one ensuing lawsuit garnered a unique place in legal history and, according to one of the law's foremost tort scholars, William L. Prosser, the reputation as "perhaps the most celebrated of all torts cases." New York Law School is inextricably tied to that case—Palsgraf v. Long Island Railroad Co.—through no fewer than six alumni.

When Helen Palsgraf commenced her lawsuit, she retained Matthew Wills Wood, Class of 1903. Wood had served as president of the senior class, graduated with honors, and was one of four students from his class to receive a graduation award—it was second prize of $100. The third prize winner (of $75) was his classmate and future Pulitzer Prize-winning poet, Wallace Stevens, Class of 1903. In 1908, Wood opened his own office at 80-82 William Street, down the block from where New York Law School would call home between 1947 and 1962.

The head of the Long Island Railroad's legal department was Joseph F. Keany, Class of 1895. Because he viewed the likelihood of liability to Palsgraf as quite small, he selected a young lawyer, William McNamara, Class of 1923, an Evening Division graduate, to defend the case. He would handle the trial of the case as well as both appeals.

Wood retained an expert witness to testify to Palsgraf's emotional injuries resulting from the explosion. The expert he retained—for a fee of $125—was Dr. Graeme M. Hammond, Class of 1897 and an 1881 graduate of the NYU Medical College. Dr. Hammond was at the time one of the preeminent authorities in the field of neurology. Dr. Hammond's most notable appearance as an expert came in 1907, when he testified for the defense in the first trial of Harry K. Thaw for the murder of Stanford White. That trial resulted in a hung jury. (At his second trial, Thaw was represented by Martin W. Littleton, Class of 1897, who won an acquittal on the grounds of insanity.)

In addition to the three lawyers and one expert witness, two New York Law School alumni served as judges in the Palsgraf proceedings. In the Appellate Division, which heard the Long Island Railroad's unsuccessful appeal from the jury's verdict in favor of Palsgraf, one of the three judges voting to affirm the award to Palsgraf was William F. Hagarty, Class of 1898. The second judge was New York Court of Appeals Judge John Francis O'Brien, Class of 1898. Judge O'Brien was the court's newest member when Palsgraf was argued and was one of the three judges dissenting from the majority opinion overturning the verdict.

Morris Ernst, Class of 1912 - A Champion of Free Speech and Individual Privacy Rights

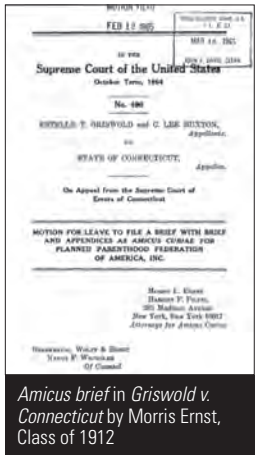

Morris Ernst, Class of 1912

One of the most significant obscenity cases of the 20th century arose out of James Joyce's literary masterpiece Ulysses, which had been banned from importation into the United States as "obscene." No one would publish it in the U.S. until 1932, when Random House offered to do so and fight the certain legal battle. Copies were mailed to New York, and customs officers duly seized them. The lead attorney for Random House was Morris Ernst, Class of 1912, and a member of New York Law School's Evening Division. Ernst was a founder of the renowned firm Greenbaum, Wolff & Ernst and he was recognized as a major champion of free speech.

Ernst contested the seizure at a trial before Judge John M. Woolsey in Manhattan federal court in 1933, arguing that community standards change with time, and that Ulysses as a whole could no longer be viewed as obscene. Judge Woolsey agreed, and, in a much-lauded opinion, allowed Ulysses to be admitted into the United States. The Second Circuit Court of Appeals later affirmed Judge Woolsey's decision. Ernst continued to achieve great successes in cases arising under the First Amendment and other constitutional provisions. In Roth v. United States, the Supreme Court addressed for the first time whether criminal obscenity laws could withstand constitutional scrutiny under the First Amendment. Ernst submitted an amicus brief on behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Estelle Griswold

Ernst was also author of an amicus brief in Griswold v. Connecticut, a case providing an important milestone in the development and articulation of the right of privacy and its range of applicability. Indeed, it paved the way for commonly understood privacy principles to extend to controversial areas of life, namely the regulation of access to birth control and contraception, and eventually to abortion. Griswold's most important legacy is the precedent it set as the critical underpinning for the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe v. Wade—and other cases that would come later—where Justice Blackmun wrote: "the Court has recognized that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy, does exist under the Constitution."

The Trial of the Century

New Jersey Attorney General
David T. Wilentz, Class of 1917

New York Law School alumni also played leading roles in some of the nation's most celebrated trials. In what for many years was described as the trial of the century, New Jersey Attorney General David T. Wilentz, Class of 1917, led the prosecution of Bruno Richard Hauptman for the kidnapping and murder of Charles Lindbergh's infant son. Hauptman was apprehended and arrested in the Bronx and needed to be extradited to New Jersey for prosecution. One other NYLS alumnus was involved in the case as well.

The lawyer who represented Hauptman in the Bronx extradition proceeding was James M. Fawcett, Class of 1912, who went on to become a New York Supreme Court Justice in 1948.

Hauptman was convicted and executed, but The Law Book addresses one of the other consequences of that trial: the first concerted effort to prohibit photography—still and moving—in America's court rooms. A 1935 American Bar Association prohibition, Judicial Canon 35, was a direct result of the circus atmosphere that surrounded the Hauptman trial. Estimates had put the press coverage at seven hundred reporters and cameramen in daily attendance. The organized bar found the excessive coverage and incessant barrage of flashbulbs unseemly. In 1937, the ABA officially adopted Judicial Canon 35, barring photographic and broadcast coverage of state court proceedings, and in 1944, Congress implemented a similar ban in federal criminal cases. Today, all states regulate the use of cameras in certain courts, though with varying levels of restrictiveness.

The Red Scare

Lloyd Paul Stryker,
Class of 1906

When New York Law School reopened in 1947 (after having closed for six years as a result of the World War II draft and lower enrollment), the country was already enmeshed in a second Red Scare and the early stages of McCarthyism. The Law Book covers the 1948 trials of The Hollywood Ten (the story underlying the 2015 movie Trumbo) and the 1954 Communist Control Act. Sandwiched between those two entries were the two trials of Alger Hiss, who had been accused of being a Soviet spy and was eventually convicted of perjury. Although neither trial is addressed in the book, two New York Law School alumni played vital roles. Lloyd Paul Stryker, Class of 1906, who the legendary Irving Younger referred to as "the preeminent criminal lawyer of his generation," represented Hiss at his first trial, which resulted in a hung jury. Judge Henry Warren Goddard, Class of 1901, presided over the retrial, where Hiss retained new counsel and was convicted. A portrait of Stryker hangs in the Mendik Library's Roger J. Miner '56 Reading Room.

The Watergate Investigation and Prosecution

Seymour Glanzer, Class of 1960

In the 1948 congressional hearings before the House Committee on Un-American Activities that resulted in Hiss's trial, one of the committee members who influenced the tenor and direction of the hearings was then-Congressman Richard Nixon. A quarter of a century later, President Nixon's role in the 1972 Watergate scandal was about to emerge. One of the three original Watergate prosecutors who participated in the grand jury investigation of the break-in of the Democratic National Committee Office and the investigation of its cover-up was Seymour Glanzer, a member of the Class of 1960. Those investigations ultimately lead to what The Law Book describes as one of the landmark decisions prompted by the Watergate break-in and President Nixon's refusal to turn over what became known as the Watergate tapes. The following is an abbreviated summary:

The 1972 burglary of the Democratic Party's Watergate offices led to the appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate. When President Nixon refused to turn over tapes of conversations recorded in his White House office, a new special prosecutor, Leon Jaworski, obtained a subpoena ordering him to do so. U.S. District Judge John Sirica denied President Nixon's motion to quash the subpoena, rejecting his claim of executive privilege. After President Nixon went to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, Jaworski took the unusual step of seeking immediate Supreme Court review. Given the importance of the issue and a need for speedy resolution, the Supreme Court agreed to hear the appeal without the benefit of an intermediate appellate decision. Less than three weeks after arguments in the case, the Court unanimously affirmed Judge Sirica's decision... The Court rejected the President's argument that his claim of executive privilege was not reviewable by the judiciary, citing Marbury v. Madison's famous pronouncement that, "it is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Reaching the merits of the case, the Court found, for the first time, "constitutional underpinning," for a claim of executive privilege but refused to define that privilege as absolute. Unless the President can identify specific dangers that can arise from disclosure of information claimed to be subject to the privilege, a prosecutor's particularized showing of need will overcome the privilege. As a result, President Nixon was ordered to provide the tapes for the District Court's private inspection. President Nixon turned over the disputed tapes shortly after the Court's July 24, 1974 decision. Transcripts were made public on August 5. Three days later, President Nixon became the only sitting U.S. president to resign from office.

The Son of Sam Murders

Mark J. Heller, Class of 1969

Judge Roger J. Miner,
Class of 1956

In 1978, alumnus Mark J. Heller '69 defended David Berkowitz, who had been charged with the series of bizarre "Son of Sam" murders that terrorized New York City between October 1976 and August 1977. Berkowitz pleaded guilty and was sentenced to multiple terms of life imprisonment. Another New York Law School alumnus, Judge Roger J. Miner '56, would later be involved in a constitutional challenge to the New York State law enacted to foreclose Berkowitz's—or any other criminal's—ability to profit from commercial exploitation of his story. The Law Book explores that law, New York's Son of Sam Law, which was enacted in 1977 in anticipation of the possibilities spawned by Berkowitz's gruesome crime spree. Judge Miner authored the Second Circuit's decision upholding the statute's constitutionality. After the Supreme Court reversed in 1991, New York amended the statute to conform with the Supreme Court's holding. That law remains in effect today and has served as a model for other states' laws.

Tobacco Litigation

Marc Edell, Class of 1975

The last of The Law Book entries that find connections to New York Law School concerns the groundbreaking lawsuit brought by Rose Cipollone against Liggett Group, Inc., maker of Chesterfields and L&M cigarettes. Cipollone was represented by alumnus Marc Edell '75. Edell helped to change the legal landscape when a New Jersey federal court refused to dismiss Cipollone's lawsuit. Cipollone died in 1984, but four years later a jury found for her family based on the company's failure to warn smokers prior to 1966. The jury assessed Liggett's responsibility at 20 percent and awarded damages in the amount of $400,000, making it the first time a plaintiff had ever sued a tobacco company successfully for smoking related injuries. In 1992, the U.S. Supreme Court provided the Cipollones with a mixed blessing. Although they retained valid claims against Liggett, they needed to be retried. But after almost 10 years of litigation, the family had had enough. They dropped the case rather than suffer another grueling ordeal.

From Tablets to Terabytes

The original subtitle that had been proposed for The Law Book was From Tablets to Terabytes, 250 Milestones in the History of Law. What that subtitle suggests about legal history is a constancy of law throughout the millennia displayed and recorded through evolving media. As a force in the world, law remains paramount—and that is true across cultures and leaders and systems. On a smaller scale, the same is true of New York Law School—it remains a vital force in legal education, leading the way today just as it did in 1891. •

A Legacy of Entrepreneurship Powering New York Law School's Future

Entrepreneurship is a core part of New York Law School's identity, from the School's origins to today's graduates who are among leading innovators. As we celebrate the Law School's 125th Anniversary, we take a look back—and forward—at the entrepreneurial spirit driving NYLS. The Law School has the ideal climate to encourage entrepreneurship, independence, and innovation with an urban campus located in the center of New York City's key economic sectors. Proximity to "silicon alley," coupled with an array of academic and co-curricular programs, provides NYLS students an ideal foundation to pursue unique interests and professions.

The success of so many graduates in unique and unexpected roles is a testament to the myriad possibilities that an NYLS education can provide. In 1939, Chester Carlson graduated from NYLS and went on to invent the technology that would become the foundation for all photocopiers—the xerography photocopy process. He licensed his technology to the Haloid Company, which is now known as the Xerox Corporation. More than 30 years later, Richard LaMotta '75, similarly pursued a non-traditional path. In his case, he created a new variation of a sweet treat—delicious ice cream sandwiches. LaMotta's creation, the now famous Chipwich, would wind up selling in the millions after being acquired by Nestle.

The entrepreneurial spirit was borne with the Law School's founding in 1891, when George Chase, Theodore Dwight, and other members of Columbia College School of Law's faculty joined with students and envisioned a new law school where they could teach and learn law differently. Breaking away and forging an independent path demanded innovative thinking and determination—key ingredients that make successful entrepreneurs.

Since that time, that spirit has lived on in the Law School's community. In particular, the entrepreneurial spirit has flourished in the technology sector. Charles E. Phillips Jr. '93, a member of the NYLS Board of Trustees, has overseen two of the largest enterprise software companies in the world, first as President of Oracle, and currently as CEO of Infor. Steven R. Harber '92 launched a career as a legal technology innovator and serial entrepreneur after seeing the need for large-scale scanning services while doing document review as an associate. In 2015, he co-founded his latest company where he is also Managing Director, Apogee Legal, which is providing technology solutions to the legal, compliance and regulatory communities.

While these seasoned alumni have established themselves as leaders in the technology sector, students and recent graduates are similarly making impressive strides in the market. Shah Kader '15 founded The AltCareers Network, which provides licensed professionals with alternative career paths. The company has released two digital platforms, including one for lawyers called Lawlternate, to find nontraditional positions in companies within growing economic sectors such as technology startups—essentially an Indeed.com for J.D.-advantage positions. Somya Kaushik '13 is the Founder and CEO of Esq.Me, Inc., the first free legal marketplace for lawyers. The site allows users to exchange documents, earn money, and create a referral system to help other lawyers. She was inspired to create this platform after she worked with several law firms and solo practitioners and recognized that smaller law firms and solo practitioners needed better resources and channels for expanding their practice, connecting with other lawyers and managing client intake. James Anthony Wolff '15 is a 3D printing and space technologies entrepreneur. He is the youngest co-founder of Deep Space Industries, a commercial space company that recently received major NASA contracts for asteroid prospecting and harvesting and which is now based in NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, California. Wolff is responsible for developing a proprietary 3D printing multi-metal technology, an in-space processing system, and a variety of spacecraft sub-systems and technologies having critical implications for industry and colonization in space. Wolff is also the CEO of D-Shape Enterprises, the world's largest concrete 3D printer specializing in residential and commercial architecture, government and military infrastructure, and space applications. D-Shape is currently engaged in 3D printing a bunker for the Italian Defense Agency, and it holds the first U.S. permit for 3D printed construction of a multimillion-dollar estate in upstate New York.

Entrepreneurship is not limited to the technology sector. Finance, sports, hospitality, and other industries are well-represented by NYLS alumni: Marc Lasry '84 is Co-founder and CEO of Avenue Capital Group and Co-owner of the Milwaukee Bucks; Vince Viola '83 is Founder and Executive Chairman of Virtu Financial and owner of the Florida Panthers; Zygmunt "Zygi" Wilf '74 is a real estate entrepreneur and owner of the Minnesota Vikings; and Joe Plumeri '15 (LL.D.) is Vice Chairman and CEO of First Data, and owner of the New York Yankees' Double-A minor league team, the Trenton Thunder. Christopher Coco '96 is a restaurant and sports bar entrepreneur as partner at Public House Investments operating over a dozen restaurants including Butterfield 8 in New York City and Public House at the Luxor Hotel &

Casino in Las Vegas, Nevada. Joseph Chung '3L runs a food truck operation in Austin, Texas. The diverse success and entrepreneurship of its alumni is also reflected in the NYLS Board of Trustees. Dr. Vincent A. Carbonell '00 is Founder and President of United Reprographic Services Inc., which provides photocopying and duplicating services for architects, engineers, construction firms, and government agencies; Gerald C. Crotty '76 is President and Co-founder of Weichert Enterprise LLC, a private equity investment firm; Lawrence N. Field '63 is Founder, Chairman, and CFO of NSB Associates Inc., a Southern California commercial real estate development and investment firm; Andrew Penson '84 is Founder and President of the real estate investment and development firm Argent Ventures LLC; Charles E. Phillips '93 is CEO of Infor; Norman J. Radow '81 is Founder and CEO of the RADCO Companies, an Atlanta-based apartment investment and redevelopment company; and Cynthia Senko Rosicki '86 is both Founding Partner of the law firm Rosicki, Rosicki & Associates and Co-founder of the award-winning Sparkling Pointe Vineyards and Winery on Long Island.

Given how crucial the entrepreneurial spirit is in today's economy, both in New York City and globally, Dean Anthony W. Crowell has positioned the Law School to undertake a set of bold initiatives to enable students to be prepared for the changing economy. One of those programs is the Innovation Center for Law and Technology. The Innovation Center serves as a forum for law students, distinguished legal practitioners, entrepreneurs, academics, and tech users to learn about, shape, lead, and benefit from the innovation economy and the growth of media, science, and technology in the digital age. Led by Professor Ari Ezra Waldman and Associate Professor Jacob S. Sherkow, the Innovation Center is the cornerstone of the Law School's efforts to be the training ground for lawyers in the fields of intellectual property, privacy, and technology law.

"The growth of existing technology, media, and applied sciences companies in New York, and the influx of new ones, provides a historic opportunity for NYLS to take a leadership role in helping New York City remain globally competitive," said Dean Crowell. "The tech industry needs a rich and reliable pool of lawyers, entrepreneurs, and legal innovators who are well-trained in the legal, technical, and business aspects of high-growth industries of the future, from cloud computing to online social networking, from 'big data' to biopharmaceuticals. The Innovation Center for Law and Technology at NYLS will have a unique vantage point from which to leverage the law to spur innovation and growth."

"We believe in law powering innovation," Professor Waldman said. "And we plan to put that mantra into action. The Innovation Center will be a dynamic center for exciting research and community service at the intersection of law and technology. We will help drive the innovation economy by helping entrepreneurs bring their inventions to market while protecting their intellectual property."

In addition to developing programming internally, NYLS is branching out into new and unique relationships to expand offerings and opportunities beyond traditional legal study to its students and alumni. Last summer, New York Law School launched an agreement partnership with the University of Rochester's Simon School of Business enabling the upstate school to establish a home base at NYLS, close to New York City's financial district, technology corridor, and civic center. By uniting institutions dedicated to business and legal education under one roof, NYLS is breaking the mold: these are the only co-located law and business schools in New York City. Never before has there been a stronger need for law students to learn the fundamentals of business and finance, and NYLS is working with the Simon Business School to harness the synergies that exist between them and capitalize on NYLS's prime location, with direct access to Wall Street, the City's government offices, and the tech corridor.

When looking at the range of innovative programs and partnerships underway at New York Law School, it is readily apparent that entrepreneurship is as important as it has ever been. Not only are lawyers helping entrepreneurs, they are becoming entrepreneurs themselves.

Featured here are more extraordinary alumni accomplishments and successes.

Mark Lapidus '12

Head of Real Estate at WeWork

When he was in law school, Mark Lapidus came to a realization: "I realized that practice wasn't for me." He continued, "I can't sit in a room behind a desk and review documents all day."

So during his third year at New York Law School, Lapidus began a full-time job at a small, new company, WeWork, which provides shared office space and support for start-ups and other entrepreneurial workers. When Lapidus started WeWork it had four locations, but has now grown exponentially to include 66 locations in five countries. The company was recently valued at $10 billion.

Lapidus is responsible for WeWork's global real estate portfolio. "I handle site selection in every market and oversee the lease negotiations between our counsel and the landlord's counsel," he said.

The education he received at New York Law School "was priceless," Lapidus adds. "It really changes the way you attack a problem and come up with a solution. For me, the education was much more important than the practice of law."

Jeffrey Mullen '05

Founder and CEO of Dynamics Inc.

When Jeffrey Mullen began studying computer science at Carnegie Mellon, he expected to become an engineer. Instead, he joined a law firm. He worked as a patent agent, writing patent applications and working on patent office actions.

At night, he attended law school. "What's so cool about New York Law School is you learn everything, from tax law to IP to torts to litigation," Mullen said.

Soon after becoming an attorney, he thought it would be cool to start his own tech company.

He founded Dynamics Inc., a start-up that provides better, more secure credit cards. "Every time you swipe the card, the number on the card and its magnetic stripe changes," he explained. Mullen patented his technology and overall has 150 patents for a variety of inventions.

David A. Napp '86

CEO of Carefree RV Resorts

After four years at a large and respected law firm, David Napp left the law and, in 1990, started his first real estate business. "I made some real money for the first time in my life," he said.

Napp began his second real estate business in 1996. A 93 percent stake in it sold, in 2004, for a reported $69 million.

Napp's current venture, Carefree RV Resorts, started with three RV parks in 2005. It now owns one hundred RV parks and senior manufactured home communities, with a projected 2015 revenue of $150 million.

Napp's education at New York Law School and his experience practicing law have played a big part in his success. "It helps me to analyze fact patterns as they arise, focus on relevant matters, and put aside all the noise," Napp said. "It helps me to run my business every day."

Nancy Lee '97

President of myregistry.com

Nancy Lee started her first business by accident. She was 27, working at a TV production company in Japan, when friends called her back to the United States to film their projects. "Soon," Lee said, "I had too much work for one person." In response, she founded a company.

The company earned more than $1 million in its first year. But there were problems. "I was constantly dealing with contracts, waivers, unions—I was over my head in many aspects," Lee said.

So Lee went to New York Law School. "It was a way to break my own glass ceiling," she said. "It taught me what questions to ask in a business negotiation, what needed to be on paper, and helped me to understand that not all problems are big problems."

She later gave back to the Law School by serving on its Board of Trustees (under the name Nancy Lee Berkowitz). She also established the Robert M. Giller Scholarship, in honor of her late husband.

After graduating, Lee sold her U.S. production company and returned to Japan. She started a cable channel whose core audience was women—something unheard of in that country. "At first, cable companies wouldn't carry the channel, because they said women don't watch cable TV," Lee explained. But after she convinced one big cable system to carry She-TV, the ratings quickly convinced the doubters otherwise.

Lee's next move was to her current job: President of myregistry.com. The gift registry company enables users to create one centralized registry for their desired gifts—even if the gifts are from many different stores. "My responsibility is to grow our business, our revenue, our partnerships," Lee said.

Lee expects to remain at myregistry.com for a while, but she anticipates her work—and her company—will change. "You have to keep readjusting, understanding where the market is," she said. "You have to embrace change."

Brian Schrader '98

Founder and President of Business Intelligence Associates, Inc.

Brian Schrader bought his first computer when he was 8 years old, using money from his newspaper route. He's been a technophile ever since. But for him to discover how to really profit from his tech knowledge, Schrader had to practice law.

Inspiration struck when "I was dealing with e-discovery, receiving huge volumes of data on firms related to illegal securities trading," Schrader recalled, and then realized there had to be a better way to gather, organize, and sift through the massive amounts of data provided by e-discovery.

He contacted a friend from New York Law School, Alon Israely '00, and the two self-described "geeky techies" went into business for themselves, forming Business Intelligence Associates. Providing a variety of computer forensics and e-discovery services, the company now has 80 employees and four offices.

New York Law School played a big part in making him a successful entrepreneur. "A lot of the professors in my corporations and securities law courses had real business backgrounds, and their entrepreneurial spirit came through. Having professors that come from that kind of world—with experience in starting companies, running companies, and handling IPOs—really made a difference," said Schrader.

Schrader has given back, particularly to the Moot Court Association, of which he was a member. Last December, he generously matched dollar-for-dollar all donations in support of the Association. And at the Commencement Exercises in May, he was one of two recipients of the Honorary Order of the Barristers Award.

Starting his own business allowed Schrader to combine two of his interests: computers and law. But that's not why he became an entrepreneur. "I did that for the same reason as most entrepreneurs: some deep drive that makes you want to create new solutions to problems that you see. And the easiest way to do that is to create your own company," Schrader said.

Dean Cycon '80

Founder and Owner of Dean's Beans Organic Coffee Company

Dean Cycon is a committed social activist. But, he said, after starting a law firm to help Native American tribes, "I found I didn't have the constitution for being a lawyer. Much of my work was [legitimizing] the very system I was seeking to change," Cycon said.

So he switched gears, founding a nonprofit to stop deforestation and help native people in Brazil. Unfortunately, "I noticed that nothing was changing, that charity wasn't social change," Cycon said.

He tried something else. "I wondered what would happen if a company were to pay a fair price to local farmers and become involved in improving social and environmental conditions," he said. Thus Dean's Beans was born.

The company earns $4 million annually by selling a variety of fair trade organic products. It has received many awards for helping poor farmers around the world.

Cycon's New York Law School education helped make this possible. "I use the law all the time in contract negotiations and in fighting adverse legal systems in other countries," he adds.

JOE AND SUSAN PLUMERI GIVE $5M TO NEW YORK LAW SCHOOL

* This article was adapted from Lawdragon. The original article appeared November 12, 2015 on www.lawdragon.com

Joe Plumeri is the kind of guy who can make you believe anything is possible.

And why not?

The grandson of Sicilian immigrants, he was infused before his first breath with a belief in the power of hard work and reaching for the stars. His grandfather was legendary in Trenton, N.J., for wooing Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig to play a game there just three days after winning the 1927 World Series for the Yankees.

After a stint in the Army, Plumeri found his first professional job in a closet on Broad Street. From there, he became a corporate titan with a raft of titles: President of Shearson Lehman Brothers; Citibank North America; and Willis, to name a few.

He's legendary for his ability to inspire – which is why he brought down the house at Carnegie Hall in May 2015, when he gave the commencement speech for New York Law School's graduates. His speech was exceptional because he is so gifted and passionate, but also because of the audience of several hundred new lawyers he was launching into choppy waters.

"Go play in traffic," he advised them, encouraging them to take risks and find their way in the world. And he told the story of how he got his start in business. In 1968, he enrolled in NYLS to pursue his dream of becoming a lawyer. Because he also needed to work, he went knocking on doors downtown hoping to clerk for a law firm.

So when he found one that had three names and an ampersand, he figured, what luck! One of the partners interviewed him and asked why he wanted to work there, and when Plumeri said to get some practical experience in the law, Sanford Weill explained that Carter, Berlind & Weill was a brokerage firm. Plumeri left law school and became a huge success in business instead of law – proof that you never know where life will take you.

So at graduation 47 years later, as he watched the students – each a story of perseverance – cross the stage to accept their diplomas, Plumeri was inspired.

"These were first generation lawyers, a person raising a child while going to law school holding their child as they went across the stage," he said. "It was inspiring, motivating and it made me feel good about what the school was doing, seeing the diversity and the opportunity it gave people."

The experience inspired Plumeri to establish The Joe Plumeri Center for Social Justice and Economic Opportunity with a $5M gift to NYLS from him and his wife, Susan. The Center will provide opportunities to law students and clients who need legal advice as entrepreneurs, veterans, immigrants and for civil rights issues.

"A large reason for whatever has happened to me in my life I owe to New York Law School," says Plumeri, who became reacquainted with NYLS earlier this year after meeting Dean Anthony W. Crowell. When Plumeri visited NYLS, he wanted to support the school's efforts to build its practical training program.

"My grandfather and great-grandfather were immigrants who came for an opportunity, not a handout," says Plumeri. "I want to make sure everybody has the opportunity to be able to live the American dream. This is my way of doing that."

The Plumeri Center will be the home of NYLS's law firm, with street-level access for clients who can receive free legal services. It will house more than 20 legal clinics from the school and offer trial practice facilities. The donation is one of the largest in NYLS history and one of the largest ever to a law school to enhance experiential learning.

“NYLS is immensely grateful to Joe and Susan Plumeri. Their generous and visionary gift will allow NYLS to fully realize the experiential learning model of a modern legal education, ensuring students have the practical training and knowledge to effectively represent a wide range of client needs,” said Crowell. “Joe is someone who firmly believes that you learn best by doing. For law students, the experience of being lawyers—whether counseling a client on business development issues or making a presentation to a public interest law organization—can be a powerful way to learn.”

Arthur Abbey, Chair of the NYLS Board of Trustees, said, “We are touched by Joe’s genuine commitment to creating opportunities for law students to serve New York’s many communities in need of free legal services. We hope to continue to offer services that distinguish us from other law schools and serve the broadest constituency possible, in the most diverse and inclusive city in the world.”

Lawyers who have represented Plumeri say the students at the clinic are in for a great experience. Samuel ‘Skip’ Keesal of Long Beach’s Keesal, Young & Logan has represented Plumeri in securities arbitrations for more than 30 years. As a client, Plumeri is always passionate and principled, he says, understanding both the business and legal matrix of the issue at hand. “Joe has such a great mind,” says Keesal. “And he brings tremendous experience and heart to any project. This law center is a wonderful gift.”

“He’s a force of nature,” says Adam Rosman, general counsel of First Data Corp., where Plumeri is currently vice chairman. “He has a vision as a business leader, a philanthropist and as a human being that’s unique.”

Rosman has advised Plumeri since 2009, and says it’s passion that drives his leadership style and his strategic and tactical thinking. “That’s not something you think easily translates to the general counsel’s office – you have to be calm and collected and reasonable.

“But what he taught me is you can be both,” says Rosman. “It changed my view of the job. I am really passionate about what I do and it’s because of him.”

- No one is better, according to Keesal and Rosman, at pairing legal intricacy with business wherewithal – a difficult balance for corporate executives. Rosman recalls working on quarterly earnings announcements with Plumeri, where you need to balance talking honestly about results with being as positive as you can. “He is a master at that,” says Rosman. “I was the lawyer, I’m supposed to be Mr. Thorough and he would be the most thorough of any of us. We would literally be on version 15 of a press release because he wanted every word to be perfect and strike the balance of telling the truth and telling the company story in a compelling way.”

- When he heard about the gift, Rosman thought, classic Joe Plumeri. “He finds something that he likes and not only brings a lot to the table, he brings the table.”

- Part of what is “beautiful” about the gift is how big it is. He could have started small, says Rosman, “but that’s not Joe. He’s all in right from the beginning. He didn’t start with just business entrepreneurs or criminal defense. It’s a full suite of opportunities for students who might not otherwise have them.”

- Plumeri hopes the Center is the beginning of something big that can change access to justice on both the lawyer and the client side. “I view this as not a one-time commitment,” he says. “Hopefully it does so well the commitment is ongoing. And if all that works, it will help build the economy of New York City, and build jobs. That’s my dream.”

- When Plumeri comes to visit, he wants to see a busy place. Dean Crowell knows the students are excited about what the future holds and to help meet the tremendous legal need in New York City. “The new Center allows us to do our part,” Crowell says.

- “I want the students to say to me this has been so wonderful I had the opportunity to practice real law with real people, that gave me experience as I go into law, and a compass to guide me as to what law I want to go into,” Plumeri says. “I would be ecstatic if a veteran said without NYLS and being able to seek legal advice without having to pay for it, I wouldn’t be able to open a business and pursue the American dream I fought for in battle.

- “I am so grateful to this country for giving my grandfather and great-grandfather the opportunity to be able to seek the American dream. They passed that opportunity on to me. And what I’m trying to create is to pass that on to other people – students, to educate and train them better, and to clients who can’t afford it. So they can all have their shot at the American dream.” •

THE CITY'S LAWYERS AND SEPTEMBER 11TH: A BREAKFAST ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION

On September 11, 2015, the Center for New York City Law presented a panel on "The City's Lawyers and September 11th: A Breakfast Roundtable Discussion." The event featured the following panelists (positions in 2001): Jeffrey D. Friedlander of the New York City Law Department; Steven Fishner, Criminal Justice Coordinator for the Mayor's office; Marjorie Landa of the New York City Law Department; Bryan Grimaldi, General Counsel for the City of New York; and Florence Hutner of the New York City Law Department. The panel was moderated by Dean Anthony W. Crowell, who himself played a lead role in 9-11 recovery and relief efforts as a city attorney. The panel discussed their roles as attorneys for the City on September 11, 2001, and in the days after, and shared stories of what happened to them at the time of the attacks. They also addressed the various legal challenges that faced the City in the days thereafter. Fishner and Dean Crowell discussed expediting death certificates for the victims to allow their families to collect life insurance. Friedlander recalled having to relocate the Law Department offices from 100 Church Street due to debris from the Twin Towers. It was a moving discussion on all fronts.

THE TYLER CLEMENTI INTERNET SAFETY CONFERENCE

On October 3 and 4, 2015, the Innovation Center for Law and Technology hosted the first annual "Tyler Clementi Internet Safety Conference." The conference was an unprecedented gathering of policy makers, political and business leaders, attorneys, social scientists, academics, teachers, students, and nonprofit advocates, all focused on the conference's theme: combatting cyber-harassment in all its forms. At this conference, New York Law School launched a first-of-its-kind direct outreach pro bono initiative that will help victims of online harassment seek justice. The conference featured two members of the U.S. House of Representatives, Kathleen Rice (D-NY) and Mark Pocan (D-WI). The conference was chaired by Professor Ari Ezra Waldman.

FINTECH: LAW AND DISRUPTION

On October 6, 2015, the Center for Business and Financial Law hosted "FinTech: Law and Disruption." Speakers discussed how technology is causing fundamental changes and increasing competition in the financial services industry. Topics included: mobile payments and digital banking, crowdfunding and peer-to-peer finance, blockchains and distributed ledgers, high-frequency trading and innovations in market infrastructure, automated financial advisors, and regulatory challenges and software-driven compliance. The conference was chaired by Professor Houman B. Shadab and was co-sponsored by Bloomberg BNA, Yodlee Interactive, Kaye Scholer, and PaymentWeek.

STORMING THE COURT: 25 YEARS AFTER H.C.C. VS. SALE

On October 16, 2015, the New York Law School Law Review hosted "Storming the Court: 25 Years After H.C.C. vs. Sale." Almost 25 years after the landmark decision about Haitian refugees being held at Guantanamo Bay, this symposium brought together the judge in the case, the Honorable Sterling Johnson, Jr. (E.D.N.Y.), Senator Christopher Coons (D-DE), Professor Harold Koh, Yale Law School (former Legal Adviser at the State Department), government attorneys, human rights lawyers and advocates, private practitioners, and a number of the most prominent former students (now all human rights advocates, lawyers and/or academics themselves) to explore the enduring impact of this extraordinary litigation. The symposium was chaired by Visiting Professor Brandt Goldstein.

IMPACT THURSDAYS: LAW AND THE LIVES OF YOUNG BLACK MEN

On November 12, 2015, the Impact Center for Public Interest Law hosted "Impact Thursdays: Law and the Lives of Young Black Men." The panel discussion featured Richard Buery, Deputy Mayor for Strategic Policy Initiatives; Alphonso B. David, Counsel to the Governor; and Nicholas Turner, President and Director, Vera Institute of Justice. The panel was moderated by Professor Mercer Givhan. More than 100 people attended this insightful discussion of some of the most challenging issues faced by young black men, and public policy responses. Specific topics included disparities in education opportunities and outcomes, criminal justice reform, and community engagement.

Professor Stephen J. Ellmann and Professor David Chang

Appointed to Named Professorships

Professor Stephen J. Ellmann

Professor David Chang

In August 2015, Stephen J. Ellmann, an expert on South African Law, Constitutional Law, and Clinical Education, was appointed as the Martin Professor of Law. Established with the support of the Martin Foundation Inc., the professorship was created in memory of industrialist, financier, and philanthropist Lester Martin (1907–59).

A member of the faculty since 1992, Professor Ellmann has been a dedicated mainstay of NYLS, both in his crucial role as Director of Clinical and Experiential Learning and in his service as Associate Dean for Faculty Development (later adding “Collaborative Learning” to his portfolio) from 2000 to 2011. He was instrumental in driving the recent expansion of clinical and experiential course offerings, including the doubling of the number of clinics offered in 2013. He also developed the Clinical Year program, which builds on the medical school model and consists of three full-time clinical rotations. The National Jurist recently named the Clinical Year one of the 15 most innovative clinics in the nation. Professor Ellmann has written extensively on the skills and ethics of lawyers’ interviewing and counseling of clients. In 1990, he earned the Sanford D. Levy Memorial Award from the New York State Bar Committee on Professional Ethics for his article, “Lawyering for Justice in a Flawed Democracy,” Columbia Law Review (1990). He has published extensively about South Africa, including a study of law at the end of apartheid, In a Time of Trouble: Law and Liberty in South Africa’s State of Emergency (Clarendon Press Oxford, 1992), and The Post-Apartheid Constitutions: Perspectives on South Africa’s Basic Law (Witwatersrand University Press and Ohio University Press, 2001), which he co-edited with Penelope Andrews.

Professor Ellmann’s investiture took place on November 23, 2015.

In September 2015, David Chang, an award-winning expert in constitutional law, including interpretive theory, discrimination, freedom of speech, and hate crimes, was appointed as the inaugural Theodore Dwight 125th Anniversary Professor of Law. This newly-created professorship honors the late Theodore Dwight, who was instrumental in founding the Law School in 1891.

Professor Chang joined NYLS in 1983. For a quarter of the School’s 125 years, he has been teaching thousands of students, attending hundreds of faculty meetings, and working with his colleagues to help fulfill the Law School’s mission and to move it forward. His NYLS roots go back even farther, to 1956, when his grandfather graduated from the Evening Division, connecting his family to New York Law School for fully half of the school’s history.

Professor Chang chaired the Academic Support Curriculum Committee, leading the effort to develop and implement the Law School’s Comprehensive Curriculum Program. He was honored with the Class of 2014 Teaching Award presented by the graduating class at Commencement. Professor Chang has written extensively on hate crimes legislation and the constitutionality of affirmative action policies. His scholarship has been recognized as outstanding. In 1992, NYLS presented Professor Chang with the Walter M. Jeffords Distinguished Writing Award for his article, “Discriminatory Impact, Affirmative Action, and Innocent Victims: Judicial Conservatism or Conservative Justices?” Columbia Law Review (1991); in 2001, the Otto L. Walter Distinguished Writing Award for his article, “Selling the Market-Driven Message: Commercial Television, Consumer Sovereignty, and the First Amendment,” Minnesota Law Review (2000); in 2008, the Otto L. Walter Distinguished Writing Award for his article, “Structuring Constitutional Doctrine: Principles, Proof, and the Functions of Judicial Review,” Rutgers Law Review (2006); and in 2012, the Otto L. Walter Distinguished Writing Award for his article, “Beyond Formalist Sovereignty: Who Can Represent ‘We the People of the United States’ Today?” University of Richmond Law Review (2011).

Professor Chang’s investiture took place on April 28, 2016.

ANNIVERSARY

The background of the page is a photograph of the ornate, vaulted ceiling of the Great Hall at Cipriani 25 Broadway. The ceiling features intricate carvings, including medallions and scrolls, and is painted in warm, golden-brown tones. The lighting is soft and ambient, highlighting the architectural details.

On December 2, a crowd of more than 350 supporters gathered at the stunning Cipriani 25 Broadway for New York Law School's 2015 Gala, which recognized the 125th Anniversary of the School's founding in 1891. Trustees, faculty, alumni, friends, and current students joined Dean Anthony W. Crowell and Gala host Arthur N. Abbey '59, Chairman of the NYLS Board of Trustees, to celebrate the milestone and to recognize this year's honorees, Joe Plumeri '15 (LL.D.) and Norman J. Radow '81.

The evening kicked off with a cocktail hour and mixer, and then led into an evening of dinner and dancing in the grand gallery of the historic landmark location. Attendees were treated to an inspiring video that featured a brief history of NYLS, and showcased the successes of the Law School's past and the vision for its future.

After dinner was served, Sam Olens, Attorney General of the State of Georgia, introduced Mr. Radow, Chairman of The RADCO Companies, an Atlanta-based, national real estate acquisition and redevelopment company founded by Mr. Radow in 1994. Serving as an NYLS trustee since 2006, he has been instrumental in guiding the Law School through a pivotal time of rebranding, strategic repositioning, and academic transformation. Mr. Radow was presented with an award for Real Estate Entrepreneurship and NYLS Leadership.

Joe Plumeri, a renowned leader in the financial services industry who currently serves as Vice Chairman of the Board of Directors and Senior Advisor to the CEO of First Data Corporation, was honored for his business innovation and visionary philanthropy. Mr. Plumeri's generosity and support for NYLS recently helped to create The Joe Plumeri Center for Social Justice and Economic Opportunity, which will serve as the School's "law firm," and allow its students to provide high-quality legal services to underserved clients throughout New York City. Mr. Plumeri, a former student of the School who left to embark on a successful career in the financial industry, was introduced that evening by former U.S. Senator Bill Bradley (D-NJ). Bradley, a two-time NBA champion with the New York Knicks, received one of the largest ovations when he was introduced.

Providing Opportunity was the theme of this year's celebration. The 125th Anniversary Celebration video highlighted the School's rich history of opening doors to many who may not have otherwise been able to pursue a legal education. Both honorees spoke movingly on the tremendous opportunities NYLS provided them on their journeys to success.

All moneys raised at the Gala will enable the School to continue to provide opportunities for students and alumni through scholarship support, programming, experiential learning, and beyond. Additional contributions were made during the Gala to support Bar Prep programs for students.

About the Gala Location

In recognition of the special occasion marked by the School's 125th Anniversary, the Gala was held at an iconic and historic location in lower Manhattan. Cipriani 25 Broadway is located in the Cunard Building, a New York City landmark, famous for its Great Hall—an Italian neo-renaissance masterpiece designed by Benjamin Wistar Morris and completed in 1921. The grand space features 65-foot high ceilings, soaring marble columns, magnificent inlaid floors, and murals painted by Ezra Winter. It was originally the home of Cunard Lines and was used as a ticketing hall until 1968.

WE SAW A HERO

Nicholas Wasicsko '87, was honored at the 73rd Golden Globe Awards ceremony on January 10, 2016. Oscar Issac, who played Wasicsko, the Mayor of Yonkers, NY in HBO's "Show Me a Hero," won the award for best actor in a television film. In accepting the award, the actor stated "this is for the memory of Nick."

Elected at the age of 28, the same year he graduated from law school, Nick was the youngest mayor of any major American city. The city, however, was under a federal court order to build public housing in predominately white middle class neighborhoods. To comply, Mayor Wasicsko needed the cooperation of the city council, but most of its members had vowed to resist forever. Nick appealed to high officials such as New York Governor Mario Cuomo to use their moral authority to bring the city council members around, but despite claiming to stand for high principles in government, they opportunistically stood aloof. As Nick told The New York Times, "I feel all alone." The confrontation got played out on the front pages of nationally circulated newspapers and in courts up to the U.S. Supreme Court.

I wouldn't have forecast such a prominent role for him when I first saw him as a rather retiring student perched in the back row of my class in State and Local Government Law. He did, however, come alive when Mayor Ed Koch visited the class, putting tough questions to the mayor.

Not long afterwards, as a mayor himself and despite his busy schedule, Nick visited my Remedies class when the students studied the Yonkers litigation. He expressed sympathy with the white voters. They feared their homes, which were the repository of their life savings, would go down in value. But he also expressed sympathy with his minority constituents who felt shunned and were often stuck in bad housing. He told me privately that truer justice would come from building the public housing in the rich, exclusive suburbs that had, unlike Yonkers, never built any public housing, such as the one in which the federal judge who issued the order lived, but the message that he drove home to the students was that people must obey court orders.

Nick worked long, hard, and ultimately successfully to get the city council to obey the court order. That is why he is the hero of "Show Me a Hero." The series title comes from F. Scott Fitzgerald who wrote, "Show me a hero and I will write you a tragedy." In 1993, at the age of 34, Nick committed suicide.

We saw a hero and he walked among us. •

Mary Rose Mercieca

November 16, 2015

Dr. Zuhayr Moghrabi '67 passed away on December 7, 2015. A member of the NYLS community for more than 50 years, Dr. Moghrabi graduated in 1967, and went on to become a member of the NYLS faculty from 1974 to 1979. He then served for many years as a member of the Law School's adjunct faculty. He was a pioneer during his time teaching at NYLS, introducing International Business Transactions, Islamic Law, and Energy Law courses to the school. Dr. Moghrabi was also a very dedicated and engaged member of NYLS's alumni community, serving on the Alumni Association Board from 1996 until 2014, when he became Honorary Director. From Dean Anthony W. Crowell, "When I began my time here as Dean, I had the opportunity to sit with Dr. Moghrabi several times to discuss ways to more broadly engage our adjunct professors and alumni. He was passionate about the work of the school and our wonderful students and he will be greatly missed by everyone who had the pleasure of knowing him."

Professor Rudolph J.R. Peritz passed away on August 5, 2015. A member of the NYLS community for nearly 30 years, Professor Peritz was a cherished faculty member whose scholarship in antitrust, computer law, and intellectual property contributed significantly to the prestige of the Law School. From Professor Edward A. Purcell Jr., "Rudy Peritz was a warm, generous, and congenial colleague whom I admired greatly as a teacher, a scholar, and a friend. Rudy was one of the first people who came to welcome me when I arrived at New York Law School many years ago. He immediately offered his assistance in helping me make the transition to law teaching, and he made me feel at home and that I could call on him for anything. Over the years our friendship grew as I enjoyed his companionship and good humor and increasingly appreciated his deep social concerns and his ever-probing intellect. Often we talked about his ideas on economics and competition policy, and he taught me far more than I had ever known about both as he worked to complete the original and revised editions of his complex and profound study of American antitrust law, Competition Policy in America [1888-1992]: History, Rhetoric, Law. His scholarship, like his mind and his conversation, was invariably incisive, enlightening, and stimulating. He will be acutely missed." From Professor William R. Mills, "I was for many years the Library's liaison to Professor Peritz. I will always remember him as one of my favorite faculty members to work with. I appreciated his warmth and keen sense of humor. A consummate scholar, he was demanding, yet patient in his demands. I felt a strong sense of accomplishment every time I was able to satisfy his challenging research requests. His loss will be felt deeply in the New York Law School community."

Mary Rose Mercieca passed away on November 16, 2015. Mary Rose worked in the Human Resources Department at NYLS for 15 years, serving for the past six years as the front desk receptionist in the Law School's flagship academic building at 185 West Broadway. She was the quintessential champion for the NYLS community. A friend and advocate for all, her warmth and charm radiated from the moment you saw her bright smile as she greeted you. Before joining the reception desk, Mary Rose provided support in many areas of the school, including to faculty members, the Registrar's Office, the Office of Institutional Research and Accountability, the Office of Institutional Advancement, and the Office of Student Engagement, among others. Mary Rose grew up in Malta and went to St. Mary's High School in the town of Victoria, Gozo, and received a Bachelor's Degree from Pace University in New York City. She loved Malta, always beamed when she spoke of it, and traveled back there annually. She is survived by her two sons: Christopher, who is currently a member of the Armed Forces, and Victor, who resides in New York with his family. She had three grandchildren.

APPLE around the WORLD

As you know, 2016 is the 125th Anniversary of NYLS. We've been celebrating this occasion by showcasing the accomplishments of our community.

Because this year is unlike any other, we are starting an "Apple around the World" campaign to showcase our alumni, wherever they are and whatever they do.

Here's how it works . . .

On the right you will find your slice of the NYLS 125th Apple. Take a picture with your NYLS 125th Apple at your office, your home, on vacation, or at someplace you love. Post your photos on social media using the #NYLS125 hashtag for Instagram, Twitter, or Facebook.

We'll share these pictures with our community throughout the celebration and during Alumni Reunion April 28th through April 30th.

Be sure to follow us on Twitter (@NYLawSchool) and Instagram (@NYLawSchool) and like us on our Facebook page (www.facebook.com/goNYLS).

Be a Part of the 125th Anniversary Celebration! Share Your Stories, Photographs, and Memorabilia.

All members of the New York Law School community are invited to contribute law school memories using our "Share Your Story" page. We also welcome photographs and documents to add to our Archives.

Visit 125.nyls.edu for more information.
