Whose Data Is It Anyway?
A game show and panel discussion event in celebration of Data Privacy Day 2011

Friday, January 28, 2011
2:30 p.m.–5:00 p.m.
Events Center, W201

Come join in the fun of Data Privacy Day 2011—an international event aimed at educating people on how to protect individual data in today’s networked and digitized society.

The Institute for Information Law & Policy will be celebrating with an event featuring a panel of privacy scholars and New York Law School faculty, Professors James Grimmelmann, Dan Hunter, and Andrew Lupu. Panel participants and IILP students will engage in an intellectual game modeled off of the British improvisation television show Whose Line Is It Anyway? The game portion of the event will be followed by presentations from our scholars and a Q&A session.

Come see NYLS professors educate us on data privacy while having fun. Warning: Audience participation will be highly encouraged.

Please RSVP to naomi.allen@nyls.edu by January 19.
