

4-14-2009

The Future of Intellectual Property in a Digitized, Globalized World and Prospects for Reform at Home

New York Law School

Institute for INFORMATION
LAW & POLICY
at New York Law School

The Future of Intellectual Property in a Digitized, Globalized World and Prospects for Reform at Home

From criminalized downloads to passionately debated Congressional patent reform, Intellectual Property is changing dramatically, with every part—patent, copyright, and trademark—being fundamentally altered by the combination of digital technology and a globalized, connected world. Q. Todd Dickinson will talk about how these changes are challenging existing industries and emerging technologies, and how the changes might be reflected in a new Administration's IP agenda.

Speaker

Q. Todd Dickinson
Executive Director, American Intellectual Property Law Association

Tuesday, April 14, 2009

6:00–7:30 p.m.

Wellington Conference Room

47 Worth Street, 5th Floor

Q. Todd Dickinson is the Executive Director of the American Intellectual Property Law Association. He previously served as Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property and Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office under President Clinton. Mr. Dickinson has also served as Vice President and Chief Intellectual Property Counsel for the General Electric Company, whose interests run from traditional manufacturing to film and new media and financial services.

RSVP to naomi.allen@nyls.edu. Seating is limited.