Threats to Personal Privacy: Location Tracking Technology

New York Law School

presents:

Threats to Personal Privacy: Location Tracking Technology

Tuesday March 20, 2012 • 6:30 p.m.
Faculty Commons W203 (185 West Broadway)

Are you concerned about your privacy when it comes to sharing your location via your mobile phone?

There has been a lot of talk about privacy issues involving the collection and sale of user data, but what about the collection of your location data? Does location-tracking technology create real threats to personal privacy? Can the government and private companies track your location as easily as they can track your data? Join us and learn what you need to know about your privacy rights and this emerging field of law.

Panelists include:

Catherine Crump, Staff Attorney, ACLU's Speech, Privacy, and Technology Project

Justin Lerer, Assistant United States Attorney, U.S. Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of New York

Andrew Lupu, Adjunct Professor, New York Law School
