Dear Subscriber:

The New York Law School Journal of Human Rights is a scholarly publication dedicated to the preservation and extension of human rights through the legal system. First published in 1983, it was founded to meet a growing need for a scholarly forum which solely addresses issues in the human rights field.

The Journal has continued a unique editorial policy of providing educational and legal journalism which provides interdisciplinary information for legal practitioners in new and breaking areas of human rights law. The Journal strives to cover new legal issues and offer viable legal alternatives which develop rather than discuss law.

Finally, the Journal of Human Rights is proud to announce that, beginning with this issue, it is the first New York Law School student publication to desktop publish its articles. The use of this technology is a result of the hard work of this year's Editorial Board and Staff Members and the foresight of the 1987-88 Executive Board.
