EDITOR'S NOTE

This is the first issue of Media Law & Policy for the 1997-98 school year. This, as well as all previous issues of Media Law & Policy, is currently available on the World Wide Web (<http://www.nyls.edu>). This issue is our Second Annual Student Issue. The articles developed from students' work in Professor Allen Hammond's Media Law Seminar, which focused on Internet law. Because of the extent and completeness of the articles submitted for publication, this issue contains three articles; our upcoming Winter 1997-98 issue will contain one additional student article.

Media Law & Policy and the Communications Media Center at New York Law School provide a forum for discussion and information on media and communications law. The Communications Media Center produces seminars and roundtable discussions on important communications and media law issues. Within the past year, the Center has produced panels on the FCC's Interconnection Orders, and the future of cable franchising.

Thanks are extended to our sponsors, the Communications Media Center, Dean Harry Wellington and the administration of New York Law School for their continued support. A special thanks is extended to Carl Billek, and to the rest of our outgoing staff.

ARTICLE SUBMISSIONS

Media Law & Policy accepts articles from professionals and academics in the field. Articles from law school students are also welcome. Submissions should be approximately 5-20 double spaced pages in length and should be submitted in printed form and on an IBM compatible Microsoft Word or WordPerfect disk. Submissions will not be returned and are subject to editing. Submissions should be sent to:
